

MIRACULOUS AMORIS.

As late I watched a summer Sabbath day
Trail down the west her robes of rose and gold
And silver-misted twilight, calm and still,
Walk downy-footed on her silent way
Darkening the greenness of the meadow sward;
I mused upon the tale so sweetly told
By the beloved of Jesus—how the Lord
Changed Cana's water into wedding wine;
And I bethought me how this heart of mine
Was like a vase with tasteless water filled,
Till thou drew near and change most wondrous made,
Wrought with thy love a miracle divine!

Thy cheek's bright flushings that so surely tell
The inner currents of thy life's red flow
And the yet deeper and intenser glow
That on thy parted lips so warmly sleeps
Like light on tremulous rose-leaves—so softly fell,
And straightway crimsoned all the watery drops!

The smile that in thy eye holds sovereign place,
And ever gracious bends the brows above,
And steps thy lips in sweetness—then, oh love,
Like golden honey dropt into the vase!

And not alone to pleasure thy faint lips
In love's name wroughtest thou this work divine,
But whoever comes, and thirsting, dips
His goblet in this brimming vase of wine,
Tasteth the sweetness and the joy of thine.

Travelling in Russia.

In order to obtain permission to travel in this pleasant Russian empire, I found it was necessary to take no less than six walks—first to the treasurer, then to the police, then to the commandant, then again to the treasurer, and lastly, once more to the police. In the parashne (permit) that you receive, it must be exactly stated how many miles you mean to travel, and the postmaster must not allow you to go a single further. For every horse you must pay half a copek the worst, which seems at first little enough; but when you consider that a worst is only half a mile, and that you always travel with three horses, it amounts at last to a considerable tax. The post chase for which you pay ten copeks a station, is nothing more than a short, uncovered wooden car on four wheels; and, instead of a seat, hay is put in the bottom, and a small box, on which the postillion sits. Of course, these machines jolt horribly, and the bells, hung to a wooden arch over the neck of the middle horse, they are harnessed three abreast, keep up a constant, abominable jingling. These, with the creaking of the car, and the screaming of the driver to his horses, make so much noise, that when, as has sometimes happened, the traveller has been flung out on the road by the violent motion of the car, the driver has gone on and never missed him till he arrived at the station.

In Russia, the moment an official personage of any sort makes his appearance, every one flies at his bidding, and all vie with one another who shall most humbly bow before him, for this is the privileged caste; and though, according to law, those who are not travelling on official business have no rights beyond those of other travellers, they who are the first to show an example of respect for the law are not the slightest attention to it. They send a servant perhaps to mention that on this or that day they will require ten or twelve horses; should anything induce them to delay their journey—a dinner, a hunting-party, or a headache of the lady—they simply put off the journey for a day or two, and desire the horses to be kept till they are wanted; and in the mean time any private travellers at the station must await their pleasure. It may easily happen, therefore, with all these hindrances, that though the Russian rate of travelling is very rapid when you get into motion, you do not, on the whole, get on faster than in a caravan. Many a time, in the course of my journey through Russia, I have not been able to do more than a single stage in a whole long day; and every time I saw a uniform, it threw me into fright lest I should not be able to get any horses better.

Waiting at the post station is, of course, extremely disagreeable. There is a room for you to wait in, and a Cossack and his wife who are supposed to wait upon you; but it is often hard to get for your money either civil treatment or food—eggs, milk, or whatever it may be that you require. With all its dangers, I greatly prefer travelling in Persia.

THE DAILY AMERICAN TELEGRAPH.

OUR SECOND YEAR!
One year ago this day was issued the first number of the AMERICAN TELEGRAPH. We were then assured by many intelligent citizens of Washington that it had already been fully demonstrated that such a paper could not live here, and that ours could not exist three months; while cautious men of business assured us that if we should succeed in sustaining it, then they would give us their support! The predictions of the former have proved baseless—the wish that was father to the thought has not been realized; and the promises of the latter have not been redeemed.

Cut off from all hopes of the kind of patronage on which other papers of this city fatten—encountering the overwhelming competition of Washington papers supported by the government patronage, and the newspapers of Baltimore, that derive their support from a commercial and manufacturing population of one hundred and eighty thousand persons—proscribed in official places—avoided by timid men in office—opposed by the concerted influence of a portion of a respectable religious community, upon a pretext entirely baseless—without the influence in the community of connexions and friends to defend us from the adroit opposition of interested competitors—we have yet maintained our position, and to-day stand before our fellow-citizens prepared to serve them faithfully, fearlessly, and independently.

We have no favors to ask. We have respect and good-will toward the people of this community, and intend to merit them in return. But we shall not do this by flattering their follies, or appealing to their sympathies. When such a course as this becomes necessary to insure success, we shall not be ashamed to fail. But until it does, our path shall lie onward and upward. We will neither fall nor falter.

Now for a few familiar words. Why do we not sell our paper as cheap as the Baltimore papers? Because we are not in Baltimore—because a commercial city of one hundred and eighty thousand people can yield an amount of advertising space not to be obtained in a community of forty thousand people who do their shopping in Baltimore!

Do their shopping in Baltimore! Yes, by a willful and unreasonable opposition to the only cheap paper of their own that ever could survive their slights, the business men of Washington give all the aid in their power to promote the interests of Baltimore merchants here. The Baltimore papers contain Baltimore advertisements; and the people of Washington compile their memoranda from such advertisements, send their orders to Baltimore, obtain their goods there, and thus make our own storekeepers pay a well-merited penalty.

Would we proscriber the papers of Baltimore? By no means. We regard the morning as flattered and dull that does not bring them to us. We are willing to encourage their circulation here. They should bring light and knowledge to every home and place of business throughout our whole city. Every one should rejoice in the facilities they afford. But the extensive circulation of a Washington afternoon paper, with the advertisements of Washington business people, should preserve us from the temptation of sending to Baltimore for those commodities which can as well be obtained in Washington. It was with special reference to this that we commenced an afternoon paper. We knew the advantages offered by the penny press of Baltimore—we appreciated them fully; we did not wish to come in conflict with them. We intended not to cross the path of those journals; and we believed our purpose would be approved by our own people.

By many, they have; but not by all so far from this, we seriously doubt (call it egotism if you will) that there is another man in Washington who would have clung to an enterprise the writer of this has adhered to that upon which he had embarked—laboring without present recompense, and with but feeble hope for the future; and even, from bitter necessity, submitting to a transitory public misapprehension of his true position in particulars of the most serious moment.

But away with the past. The present around us, and the prospect before, are what now concern us. We have no regrets—no regrets. We have no enemies that we know of, and care not a dime for any that are unknown. We intend to labor on, to improve with increasing means, to stand by our friends, to make them many, to stifle no sentiment, to exercise no opinion, to conciliate no bigot, to flatter no man, to worship no public or private wrong, and in general to live honestly, soberly, democratically, and peaceably, and die only when our time shall have come.

If, therefore, any of our fellow-citizens shall feel inclined to give us kind words of encouragement, and to render us kindly aid, at the commencement of this our second year, we cordially invite them to our office. We will greet them at the threshold with a friendly welcome, endeavor to make a good return for all the benefits we shall receive at their hands, and preserve them from all future regrets that such has been their course.

This gallery possesses many advantages over others, being built on the second floor, and arranged expressly for this purpose. It contains one of the largest skylights in this country, and is the most extensive and most south of Baltimore. It possesses every facility for copying Paintings of Characters, not to be surpassed in the world—where may be obtained beautiful and highly-finished Daguerrotypes in all weather, though exposed to the elements for years. Portraits of eminent persons specially attended to.

Awarded the first medal at the late Fair of the Maryland Institute.
